APOC Aviation acquires CF34-10E engine for teardown

“This engine extends our market capabilities, and we perceive growing demand for high quality USM in 2026.”

Bruce Ansell, Technical Manager – Engine Division

The Netherlands, January 06 2026: APOC Aviation, a trading and leasing specialist for narrowbody aircraft parts, engines and landing gear, has just acquired a CF34-10E engine for teardown with all USM available for sale or exchange opportunities. Most recently operated by Kenya Airways the engine asset will be dismantled in Europe with parts located at APOC's warehouse close to Schiphol.

According to Bruce Ansell, Technical Manager – Engines Division at APOC, this engine expands APOC's engine material base. “We currently have two V2500-A5 recently torn down, the CF34 will extend our market into this popular engine variant. We are actively looking for further opportunities for CFM teardown engines to meet customer demand from airlines and traders.”

The GE CF34-10E engine powers the Embraer E190/E195 regional jets and the larger Embraer Lineage 1000 business jet, offering around 20,000 pounds of thrust for these popular aircraft. It's known for reliability and fuel efficiency, making it a mainstay in regional aviation for dependable performance on shorter routes.
